HARDLY THE MAN.

Oscar Branch Colquitt stands for everything that President Wilson does not. In Washington, he would amount to a political misfit, to a blunder. Temporally, he is near kin to Theodore Roosevelt, without any of Mr. Roosevelt's intellectual genius. By this, we mean to declare that Colquitt is a man who acts without discretion, only moving according to impulse and prejudice. Primarily, however, he stands out as an enemy of the sort of Democracy we must look forward to during the next few years, if President Wilson is re-elected; and his very nature is such that he would, in the event of becoming our Senator, constitute a thorn in the side of Democracy, to the extent that he would irritate those high-minded men in authority, whose sole aim is to keep the United States free from military hostility, even though skeptics snarl and jingoes go into orbit on every possible, and impossible, occasion.

THE FINAL ACT.

Sir Roger Casement is dead-hunged for treason. According to the law, he was guilty, and no sentimental view of his case can disquiet the damping facts. According to history, he lived and died a traitor; but history only reckons with what has been done with facts considered separate from their surroundings. Once, in the United States, there was a man who rebelled from English authority. With just grievance, as his story records, he rebelled. But he was different from Sir Roger Casement in this respect: he succeeded, and the mother land, at the time of his success, was not fighting the fight of centuries. George Washington is one of the world's patriots of all time; Sir Roger Casement is dead—a traitor. Yet Ireland has not been without deep injustice to brood over; and Sir Roger Casement was a dreamer, in many ways a man of enterprise and humor.

Cotton is doing some high jumping, and Nueces county's late crop will just about hit the crest of the market.

Dr. Wiley has announced for Hughes. Now we expect to see the distinguished candidate wear a portable screen over his whiskers.

Since Dr. Akef has resigned, Henry Ford will have most of the peace business on his own hands, but Henry doesn't mind—you see he hires so many hands.

The Allies are making steady progress; but the Czar no longer mentions Christmas dinner in Berlin. Possibly he would be glad to compromise on a little mid-winter feast in Warsaw.

Five hundred people have been burned to death in Canadian forest fires. We hardly stop to read. Beside Europe's shambles, five hundred seems so petty. It may be that the world's sense of horror has been paralyzed.

Texas heat is less deadly than New York, Illinois or Missouri heat. So far as we know, it has only produced profanity and sweat along the border, and yet those special correspondents have the temerity to mention it among the coffins of the East.

ODDS WITH KOENIG.

The Deutschland is probably in mid-Atlantic. Captain Koenig succeeded in shaking off the Virginia capes, and the remainder of his voyage, while perils, offers odds in his favor. A submarine, after all, is only a mere mite of a thing, difficult to discover, with nothing more than a coming tower or a periscope exposed. Then, when the enemy is sighted, there is the power to dive an indefinite number of miles, in any direction whatever! On the other side, things will run thick again. There are innumerable mines to be avoided, and nets, strung out secretly by the British, not counting swarms of swift motor boats, designed for the express purpose of running down submarines. Besides, it is fair to assume that the whole British navy, or that portion of it available, will be on sentry duty, sweeping the waters incessantly for the daring blockade-runner; for the English are determined to keep all war materials out of Germany, and they cannot risk the creation of a regular fleet of such vessels as the Deutschland, even if they are incapable of carrying on anything except the most limited trade in precious cargoes.

Caranza expresses himself as much pleased with the American attitude. From this, it is plain he doesn't consider it striking.

PARAGRAPHINGS

What makes you think your boy is in training camp, Morris? Harry has been away from home, but he knows something queer to happen. He broke a guitar all broken—browning's Magazine.

Father is a Doctor. A man who makes a lot of money. —The only difference is he's right when he's wrong. The doctor says you can't live in this house for a week without getting sick.

What is most remarkable nowdays? Why, that what happens. You don't say! The most remarkable part of it is that you want to live in this house for a week without getting sick.

I hear that you sometime's write from prison? You expect me to believe that? I know as if I were going to be sick and I'd rather not tell them that I was sick. —Washington Post.

The Wonders of Science.

A country man, writing for the educational department of a thin magazine, has just formed a company out of a dozen citizens of the middle states and southern U.S.A. to start up the Mexican Trade.

I hear that the new Pacific cable is moving across the ocean. —The San Francisco Bulletin.

Our last word any day is from the old man personally.

The Doctor thinks him to be perfectly good and sound.

The Easiest Way.

A professor of a western engineering college says that out of the accumulated literature on the applications of heating such as the following, he is sure, he would play it down as follows:

"An iron pipe is to be heated in the furnace, and then passed through a coil of wire which is wound around the pipe. The coil is to be connected to a battery, and the current is to pass through the pipe." The Doctor was to be informed in the past month, perhaps by other men, that he had done this in his room in the basement of his house, and that he had succeeded in heating the pipe.
